I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The Minister of Women and Human Rights Development stated that the delegation of Somalia was devastated by the shocking news of a brutal attack that had taken place the night before at a sea side restaurant in Mogadishu. Terrorist fighters had killed at least 20, among them 4 children. She expressed the deepest condolences of the delegation for those killed and wished a swift recovery for the injured.

6. The Minister reaffirmed the commitment of the Federal Government of Somalia to the universal human rights. Somalia had made persistent efforts to cultivate a pluralistic society and welcomed engagement with all stakeholders. For the first time since 22 years, Somalia was chartering a new territory. A prosperous, just and secure Somalia was on the horizon for all to see. Nevertheless, this fragile change required utmost care and the sustained focus of the international partners. The Minister cautioned against Somalia being stricken off the international priority list as new hotbeds emerged around globe.

7. The Minister indicated that Somalia had received and supported 155 recommendations, committing itself to do all within its ability to implement them. The situation of Somalia had not been completely stable for 25 years. The challenges facing

Somalia were, among others, lack of security, extreme poverty and environmentally induced disasters such as droughts and flooding.

8. The Minister thanked the United Nations Mission to Somalia, and more specifically, its Human Rights Section for their relentless support to all Government institutions dealing with human rights, and particularly their assistance to the Ministry of Women and Human Rights Development.

9. The Minister indicated that the Government and human rights defenders had endorsed an Action Plan for the Human Rights Roadmap. This action plan laid out the responsibilities for implementing the roadmap in terms of the lead Ministry, other participating ministries, and other partners. The immediate need was support for technical assistance and financial resources.

10. There were four priority areas in the action plan. These were the establishment of the independent human rights commission, building the capacity of the Ministry of Human Rights, protection of vulnerable groups and civilians, and compliance with international humanitarian law. The Minister underscored the importance of investing in the capacity of the Ministry and that of the awaited Human Rights Commission, which would enable these institutions to implement the other priorities more effectively. The Minister also underlined that her ministry was putting special emphasis on the protection of minority groups, taking steps to include them in the ongoing political process of federalising Somalia.

11. Concerning security, the Minister indicated that the Ministry of Internal Security was leading the process to establish unified, accountable, and rights-based security institutions, providing basic safety and security for all Somali citizens.

12. While preventing underage recruitment and ensuring the release of children associated with armed entities, the Ministry of Defence and the Ministry of Internal Security were leading the process involving integration of formal and informal security forces. The National Programme for Disengaged Combatants addressed more than 300 disengaged combatants in the country. It was aimed to achieve sustainable reintegration and reconciliation, putting an emphasis on the specific needs of child combatants, female combatants, and their dependents.

13. The Minister highlighted that, as stated in the national report, the Government was preparing to provide more training to prosecutors and police investigators on human rights in the administration of justice in the coming three years in order to give special attention to human rights of women, children, minorities and persons with disabilities.

14. With regard to women, the Minister stated that Somalia had made significant progress to address the issue of gender inequality. The Government had worked tirelessly to combat disparities in fundamental and basic rights, in access to and control of resources, in employment, in governance and in political participation. The provisional Constitution provided significant affirmative action measures to ensure gender equity and equality.

15. The Somali National Gender Policy included priorities for women's economic empowerment and their participation in political and decision-making process. Government institutions had revitalised their structure by setting up departments focused on gender affairs, including the establishment of the Ministry of Women and Human Rights Development to steer women affairs at the Cabinet level.

16. One of the most significant milestones for women was the common agreement that there shall be a fixed quota of parliamentary seats for women, which would remain vacant if a woman was not elected to that seat. The Ministry of Women and Human Right Development was campaigning throughout the regions of Somalia to encourage local representatives to include women and minority groups in the federal states formation process.

17. Regarding children and youth, the Minister stated that, despite political volatility, insecurity, limited access and resources, Somalia had made significant advances since the last review. Accession of Somalia to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child in January 2015 was a historic milestone.

18. Furthermore, Somalia continued its effort for the release and reintegration of children recruited by armed forces and groups. For this, the Government had established the Serendi rehabilitation centre for disengaged fighters of armed groups. The purpose of this centre was to rehabilitate adults and children formerly associated with armed groups before reintegrating them into society. Since the latest visit of the Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, the management of the centre had reviewed and significantly changed the procedures and policies of the centre, making it more transparent and open to independent monitoring, resulting in transfer of 64 disengaged child fighters to child-appropriate facilities better equipped for their specific needs.

19. The Attorney General stated that most significant obstacle for human rights protection in Somalia was the fragile security situation created by terrorism. Frequent terrorist attacks on government officials, human rights defenders and civilians had perpetuated a continuous state of fear. To prevent terrorism and to reduce its adverse consequences, the Government had drafted the first ever National Counter-Terrorism Law. The cabinet had approved the law and sent it to parliament, where it was awaiting to be tabled.

20. This bill would better enable the Office of the Attorney General to prosecute effectively groups and individuals suspected of terrorism, as it provided a legal framework for the fight against terrorism. It also gave special powers to security forces to conduct missions within a legal scope. It would ensure due process for suspects and protection for witnesses. The Government had also reaffirmed its commitment to be cautious with affiliating any organization with terrorism without substantial and solid evidence.

21. The Government had undertaken efforts to make the public aware of the challenges in its role to ensure both the security of the nation as well as the citizen's right to expression and assembly. Moreover, the Government was working to establish the necessary legal framework to guarantee freedom from arbitrary arrest to the citizens, as provided in the provisional Constitution.

22. Concerning media, the Attorney General indicated that the Government firmly believed that every person had the right to disagree with, or dissent from, the Government, and to state that disagreement or dissent publicly as guaranteed by the provisional Constitution. However, this could only happen within the limits of orderly discourse in a democratic society. No citizen had the right, even if disguised as freedom of expression, to incite, defame, or endanger the society and its security.

23. In this regard, the Attorney General gave an example of a journalist that had falsely spread news that Ebola had been diagnosed in Somalia. This news wreaked havoc upon Somalia's already fragile society and economy, causing flights to be canceled, shipments to be postponed and important work to be halted. Another example was the radio host calling up all Somalis to rise against the Government violently if necessary. These kinds of freedom of expression outings could never be tolerated for obvious reasons.

24. The Somali National Media Law provided for the rights of the journalist. The Media Bill had been formulated while engaging in full consultations with all sectors of the Somali media community. This bill had been passed into law in the past two weeks and signed by the President. With this law, the Government ensured that journalists are dealt with in accordance with the laws of the nation. This included that every suspect is brought before a competent judge within 48 hours, that no one is subjected to torture or inhumane treatment, and that the right to legal representation and a fair trial is guaranteed. All law enforcement and security agencies, including the National Intelligence and Security Agency, adhered to the constitutional laws of the country.

25. It remained a challenge for the Government to prevent the killings of journalists. However, the Office of the General Prosecutor had taken steps to prevent that the perpetrators enjoy impunity and freedom. It had conducted investigations into the killings of journalists, to bring those suspected before the court of law.

26. The Government works tirelessly to prosecute all crimes of assassinations. One of the groups that were targeted most by armed terrorist groups was the government officials. In the past three years, about 24 judges and prosecutors had been killed through target killings.

27. As for the justice sector, the Attorney General indicated that access to qualified and competent legal aid remained challenging. To improve credibility and independence of the judicial system, the Government had worked to strengthen access to justice for vulnerable groups, including women and IDPs.

28. The Ministry of Justice had been working to improve the capacity of the judiciary. The Office of the Attorney General was continuously working to enable the prosecution of suspects of crimes, such as terrorism and piracy, in accordance with the principles of due process. Concerning piracy, the Government had worked to interrupt criminal activities at sea, strengthening domestic maritime law-enforcement capacity and addressing the root causes of maritime crime on land. A ban on ransom payments for piracy hostages had not been feasible due to lack of enforcement capacity.

29. The number of qualified police investigators, judges, prosecutors and other judiciary staff had been increased. More than 30 judges and prosecutors had completed a 2-year judicial training. The Office of Attorney General had also recruited 20 more new prosecutors, including six female.

30. The courts had delivered a number of significant judgments, directly invoking both constitutional provisions and other national laws. Judgments relating to sexual violence against women and children had also been passed on. The Government had been vocal about the passing of these judgments to make citizens aware that impunity would not be accepted in Somalia.

31. Regarding the death penalty, the Attorney General stated that eliminating this penalty was something that required a long process. The Somali provisional Constitution prescribes that the Sharia Law is the paramount law. The Sharia prescribes the death penalty for a limited number of crimes. Somalia is reviewing penal procedure codes to reduce the number of crimes for which the death penalty was applied and is looking into alternative penalties, such as life sentencing, for the other death penalty crimes.

32. Concerning torture, the Attorney General affirmed that the Government did not condone torture or ill treatment of any person. All law enforcement and security agencies adhere to this principle. The Government was working to raise the awareness that there cannot be any circumstances in which torture was permissible.

33. There has been no forced evictions of internally displaced persons in Mogadishu or anywhere else in Somalia apart from incidents. In Mogadishu, the IDPs were living in camps managed by NGOs, which were monitored by the Government to ensure full protection and assistance to these people. Court workers went to these camps to listen to their complaints and took the necessary action to contact the relevant authorities for follow-up. No one was arbitrarily evicted from their home and the Government did not allow this to happen.

34. The Office of the General Prosecutor had been active to investigate sexual crimes and to set an example that no crime, especially that of sexual violence, go unpunished. So far, the General Prosecutor's Office had been successful to bring 69 cases before a judge in 2015.

35. Regarding corruption, the Attorney General indicated that his office regularly referred cases to the Office of the General Prosecutor to investigate and bring them before a judge. However, in order to combat corruption more effectively, the National Independent Anti-Corruption Commission and the Judiciary High Commission needed to be established. Moreover, it was very important to undertake complete capacity building of the institutions meant to fight corruption, such as the Office of the General Prosecutor, the Auditor General, the Criminal Investigation Department and the courts.

36. The Government had taken important steps to ensure that its military forces and African Union Mission forces, AMISOM, comply with international humanitarian law and human rights. However, while aware that these troops were committed to adhering to these fundamental principles, incidents that deeply concerned the Government and people had taken place.

37. The latest of such incidents was the airstrikes of the Kenyan Defense Forces, some of which had targeted civilian areas and caused heavy casualties. The Government was committed to conducting impartial investigations into this incident and is requesting parliamentary oversight, asking the defense committee of the Parliament to also look into the matter.

38. As a result, the Government increased its engagement and monitoring of the work of AMISOM to ensure full compliance with international humanitarian law and human rights norms. A total of 10,700 Somali National Army soldiers were trained in United Nations Human Rights Due Diligence.

39. The Ministry of Women and Human Rights Development had engaged in dialogue with AMISOM in order to take special measures for protection of Somali women and girls from sexual exploitation and abuse. The Government and AMISOM had set up a joint task force to work together in cases of alleged human rights violations to come up with appropriate and timely responses to such incidents.

40. Regarding violations of children's rights, the Attorney General highlighted Somalia's commitment to protect children by signing the Standard Operating Procedures on reception and handover of children from armed groups. The Government also worked with UNICEF to implement the global campaign "Children, Not Soldiers" and the two Action Plans signed in 2012—one on ending the recruitment/use of children and the other on ending the killing and maiming of children.

41. In conclusion, the Minister highlighted that the Government had put into place a number of participatory schemes to jumpstart a national dialogue. She thanked fellow Member States and the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and UN agencies for assisting Somalia in its efforts to follow the highest standards of respect for human rights. She underscored that Somalia was pleased to take advantage of sincerely offered advice, as proved by its acceptance of all the recommendations during the previous cycle.
